

Rubric for “孝” (Filial Piety)

The focus of this rubric is not to determine whether a specific behavior is objectively filial or unfilial, but rather to assess modern perceptions of “孝”—that is, whether it is still regarded as a moral principle worth upholding, seen as morally neutral or insignificant in daily life, or viewed as an outdated or even burdensome requirement that should be abandoned.

0 (False)

The character “孝” appears in proper nouns or fixed contexts—such as geographical names, personal names, usernames, book titles, film titles, or other visual materials—and is not related to the substantive content of the post. Quotation from ancient texts without personal comments.

0 (Neutral)

Referring to someone as a “filial” or “unfilial” person without mentioning specific behavior or making moral judgment. It functions more as a fixed expression. This often occurs in an entertainment-oriented or joking context.

–1 (Mild Negative)

The post recognizes the value of filial piety but also conveys the pressure, conflict, or discomfort associated with this expectation. The individual appears torn between personal choices and parental expectations or filial-piety-related principles, expressing doubt or ambivalence toward filial piety. Alternatively, filial piety may be used sarcastically to criticize, while its value is not wholly rejected.

–2 (Strong Negative)

The post strongly criticizes filial piety, portraying it as a requirement that leads to personal suffering or unhealthy family relationships—for example, limiting personal freedom or the pursuit of individual goals due to parental pressure and expectations of being filial.

1 (Mild Positive)

This category appears in two main forms:

1. General praise of filial piety or descriptions of commonly accepted filial behaviors in everyday life (e.g., running errands for parents, buying gifts, spending time with them, taking care of parents). Treat filial piety as a criterion in forming relationships, such as choosing friends or spouses.
2. Mild criticism of unfilial behaviors (e.g., causing parents to worry due to illness, delaying marriage, or arguing with parents).

Both aspects indicate continued acceptance of the moral value of filial piety.

2 (Strong Positive)

This category also appears in two main forms:

1. Strong praise of exemplary filial behaviors (e.g., rewarding or giving bonuses to filial employees), treating filial piety as a basic requirement of being human, and using it as an important criterion in forming relationships, such as choosing friends or spouses, often with detailed or elaborated descriptions.
2. Harsh condemnation of unfilial behaviors (e.g., physical abuse of parents), including the use of strong language or equating unfilial conduct with other severe moral transgressions (such as licentiousness or jealousy).

Both aspects reflect a strong endorsement of filial piety as a moral principle.

对“孝”的态度的评判量表

本量表的重不在于判定某一具体行为在客观上是否孝或不孝，而在于评估当代社会对“孝”的认知与态度——即它是否仍被视为值得遵循的道德原则，是否被看作在日常生活中道德上中性或无关紧要，或者被认为是一种过时甚至令人感到负担沉重、应当被抛弃的要求。

0(否定 / 无关)

“孝”字仅出现在专有名词或固定语境中，如地名、人名、用户名、书名、电影名或其他视觉材料中，与微博帖子的实际内容无关；或仅为对古代文本的引用，并未提供个人评价。

0(中性)

称呼某人“孝”或“不孝”，但没有列出具体的行为，且不作道德判断，更像是一种固定用语；常见于娱乐性、玩笑式语境中。

-1(轻度负面)

帖子承认孝道的价值，但同时表达了由此带来的压力、冲突或不适感。发帖人似乎在个人选择与父母期待或孝道相关的原则之间摇摆，表现出对孝道的怀疑或矛盾态度；或以讽刺的方式对“孝”加以批评，但并未完全否定其价值。

-2(强烈负面)

帖子对孝道进行强烈批评，将其描绘为导致个人痛苦或不和谐家庭关系的要求，例如：因父母压力与孝道期待而限制个人自由或追求个人目标。

1(轻度正面)

此类主要有两种表现形式：

1. 对孝道的一般性赞扬, 或对日常生活中普遍认可的孝顺行为的描述(如为父母跑腿、买礼物、陪伴父母、照顾父母); 将孝道视为建立人际关系(如选择朋友或配偶)的标准。
2. 对不孝行为的轻度批评(如因生病让父母担心、结婚比较晚、与父母争吵等)。

以上两个方面均表明对孝道道德价值的认可。

2(强烈正面)

此类同样主要有两种表现形式:

1. 对模范孝行的高度赞扬(如奖励或给“孝顺”的员工发奖金), 将孝道视为做人的基本要求, 并作为建立人际关系(如选择朋友或配偶)的重要标准, 且常伴有较为详细的描述。
2. 对不孝行为的严厉谴责(如虐待父母), 使用强烈措辞, 或将不孝行为与其他严重的道德过失(如淫乱、嫉妒等)相提并论。

以上两个方面均体现出对孝道作为道德原则的强烈认同。